

I am upset that the federal government is considering interfering with the Wisconsin telemarketing law. It has been a delight to not receive call after call. There are still too many that get through as it is because of automatic dialers. If we leave a bank or service it is for good reason and if they can not get us back after one call it is unlikely they will after two or more. If anything should change it would be for the long distance rates to go up slightly to cover access charges. As it now stands, my access charges are more than my actual long distance charges. Let the telemarketers pay their fair share.
